

CHAPTER VI

ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY

Stafield B. (1992). Primary care. New York: Oxford University Press.

This book was organized into three parts. Part one was written on the basic concepts and the goals of primary care. Part two presented the knowledge on the elements of primary care. Based on this, the author discussed the ways to assess the accessibility of primary care. Part three discussed policies for primary care with clear examples.

WHO. (1996). Primary health care concepts and challenges in a changing work.

This book discussed the contents of primary health care. The main elements of primary health care and ways to develop primary care were discussed carefully. The book was divided into eight chapters. Chapter one presents primary health care approach. Chapters two and four present the recommendations of Alma – Ata on development of primary health care elements into community. Chapters three and five discuss the national strategies to develop primary care system in country. Chapter six presents the international development of primary health care. Chapter seven talks about the trend of primary health care in future. Chapter eight is the summary with the attached Declaration of Alma – Ata.

Shi L. (1997). Health services research methods. NewYork: Delmar Publishers.

This book presents the basis knowledge on research methods. The methods of identifying and solving a problem of health service were presented carefully. The skills and techniques required for a research were also discussed. Suitable basis bio-statistics knowledge was presented in each chapter. The book is organized into 15 chapters. Chapter one lays the groundwork for the following chapters. Chapter two examines the conceptualization of health services. Chapter three focuses on health service research. Chapters four to nine discuss the various types of health service researches. Chapters 10, 11, 12 and 13 focus on methodology: designing, sampling, measuring and data collection. Chapter 14 presents the main statistics analysis contents. Chapter 15 explores the publicizing research findings.